

Global Parliament of Mayors Project

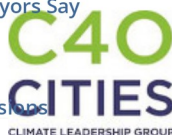

Convening in 2016

The success of the Global Parliament of Mayors relies on close working relationships with the existing organisations who work with Mayors and their political advisors. This is a short list of the organisations we are engaging with in the development process and delivery of the GPM:

Background

Founded by former London mayor Ken Livingston, the C40 network has become one of the most powerful voices of carbon environmental responsibility in the world. Tens of thousands of tons worth of carbon emissions – the equivalent of entire countries – have been reduced thanks to the efforts of this organization. Even as nation-states bicker, mayors are getting the job done.

Made up of over 1000 cities in over 95 countries, the United Cities and Local Governments is the world's pre-eminent network of cities. Government decentralization, gender equality, and sustainable development are some of the issues which this organization promotes among its members, and it is becoming increasingly active as a lobbying force within such veritable global institutions as the United Nations.

Founded in the depths of the depression, the United States Conference of Mayors represents the interests of cities in Washington. Decisive, non-partisan and pragmatic, the CoM stands for everything that Congress is (currently) not.

CityNet provides a platform for cities across Asia to communicate with, and learn from, their neighbors. Uniquely among city networks, they incorporate members of civil society and business within their membership. This diversity and openness to innovation makes them a powerful voice for urban interests within their region.

The World Cities Culture Forum is a collaborative network of world cities that share a belief in the importance of culture for creating thriving cities.
